Not illustrated. 1856 Excerpt: .in the city, to you, gentlemen, and to the citizens and public in general. And it is the question whether a citizen who not only conscientiously believes, but morally knows, and not only that, but can demonstrably exhibit that he is charged more, week after week, and quarter after quarter, than the worth of the gas he uses, can be compelled to pay whatever the Company may see fit to charge or demand. And, as I said, it is a question which greatly concerns the defendant, yourselves, and all the community. Now in this particular case the defendant conies before you asking the plaintiffs to prove their case against him. You know that for more than two days past they have been endeavoring to make out a prima facie case against us, and on Saturday stated that they had closed it. But to-day, this very morning, they have put in further testimony, have done their best to strengthen their position, and now, after all this effort, I put it to you, I ask you whether they have made out any such case as can give them a right to demand of you, or can authorise you to give any verdict whatever against the defendant. I say that the case the plaintiffs have here presented will not justify you in giving one farthing s damages against my client. The Court will instruct you, gentlemen, that every averment in the writ is bound to be proved beyond a...
