Excerpt: . . . method with the one who does not understand numbers. These children are not making any remarkable progress, but are slowly and surely improving. It takes infinite patience and perseverance, but there is a satisfaction in helping these poor little darkened minds that makes it seem well worth while to do the extra work. I always go back over all the work they have ever had and try to get them to understand one step before the next one is attempted. Have these children had a physical examination You know quite often it is found that retarded children are suffering from some physical ailment that can be easily corrected. John had adenoids, which prevented his learning when he first started to school and after they had been removed he could have learned if anyone had taken the pains to start him. I should be very glad to know how you get along with these people and what methods you find most successful in teaching them. Florence Doubet, Hamptoti, Iowa Uses for Old Postcards Frieda M. Heath Postcards are easily procured. Almost anyone can obtain many old ones from friends who no longer care for them. Also they are stiff and do not require mounting, although this may be done. I find my beginners are very happy merely looking at pictures on postcards. Any kind of pictures almost, they like to look at, but postcards of the right kind are easily handled and not easily bent....
