VIII., says, it in all its parts hangs closely together with the Pentateuch. The same critic expresses his judgment concerning the historical value of the Chronicles in the same questions, by saying that he excludes their narrative in the time of the Persian Empire,<sup>1</sup> makes their notice comparatively unimportant in our investigation. The relation and interdependence of these different portions agree, according to the critical theory, with the order of time just indicated. D forms the connecting link between S and Q,<sup>2</sup> so that in the particular case before us, the Deuteronomic law concerning the Cities of Refuge forms a transition from the altar in Ex. xxi. 1-t to the Institution in Numbers and Joshua.<sup>3</sup> One element of the argument to prove this relation of the different strata needs mention here. Others belong farther on. Much stress is laid...
