Interesting as these investigations undoubtedly are in themselves, there is, nevertheless, another field of physiological research, which, according to my way of thinking, transcends all others in importance - I mean the economical questions involved in normal and morbid intellection. The demands upon the thinking apparatus have never been greater than at present; but, at the same time, the factors which exert a prejudicial influence upon the cerebral mechanism have never been more numerous. That these are indeed facts, and not assertions derived from mere empty hypothesis, is abundantly proven by the alarming increase of intellectual disorders in this country during the last few years.
